

Scotland is the past hundred years. New Zealand is the next.

New world single malt for the world's largest whisky market.

India drinks more whisky than any country on earth, and its premium drinkers already collect Macallan, Yamazaki and their own sold out single malts. New Zealand arrives as the new world origin, in allocations small enough that owning one is the whole point.

No. 1

India is the largest whisky market on earth by volume; single malt is its fastest growing tier

Other countries can make mānuka smoked or tōtara cask whisky; the flavours are ours alone

WHAT WE DO FOR A DISTILLERY

Positioning

Against Scotch and Japanese prices, never under them, into collector and gifting channels.

The story travels

Every allocation ships with its provenance, cellar door to bar cart, in the JC story frame per distillery.

Route to market

Importers and state licences for spirits, duty proof pricing, and the bars and clubs where collectors buy.

Collective scale

Tiny allocations from several distilleries in one consolidated shipment.

WHY INDIA'S COLLECTORS ARE READY FOR NEW ZEALAND

- India's collectors know what early looks like: Amrut and Paul John went from curiosity to sold out. New Zealand single malt is that moment again, cleaner, greener, more bespoke.
- Scarcity sells like the single malts: limited parcels, numbered allocations, producer stories with awards.
- Mānuka smoke, tōtara casks and pure alpine water are flavours no other country can make.
